FRIENDS OF THE LOST ALLEGED MURDERER ARE IN JAIL.

Oswald Gray Buried, and His Alleged Murderers Are in Jail.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Luray, Va., August 10.—Hundreds of people from Page and Madison and Rockingham Counties attended the burial to-day of Oswald Gray, who is alleged to have been cut to death in the Blue Ridge on Friday night by Thomas Emanuel and Leon Alger. The burial took place from the home of his father, R. O. Gray, in the foot of the hills of the Blue Ridge, to which place the victim's body was borne down the rugged mountain side by companions who were present when the murder was committed.

Two women were witnesses of the tragedy. Raymond Gray, cousin of the murdered man, was also terribly beaten by the Alger boys. Oswald Gray's body was a mass of wounds and bruises, which are said to have been made by "knives" or blackjacks. Strong talk is being indulged in by friends of the murdered man, who declare that the Alger boys should be taken from jail and burned alive.

Two of the Alger boys came to Luray at a late hour last night and are now in steel cages. Leon Alger was arrested by Sheriff Sedwick and Sheriff Hendrix. Raymond Gray was found on top of the Blue Ridge at 3 o'clock this morning.

COAL TAR DYE FOR EGGS IN FAKE TOM AND JERRY

Government Uncovers Adulteration, and New York Firm Is Fined.

Washington, August 10.—Even "Tom and Jerry," the time-honored Christmas drink of the South, is not safe from the adulterator. Sleuths of the Department of Agriculture have just uncovered a drink, which, labeled "Tom and Jerry," contained instead of the eggs that give body to that famous concoction, a kind of coal-tar dye.

The makers of this upstart beverage, New York firm, pleaded guilty, and the court imposed a fine of $25.

The real "Tom and Jerry" is made by a receipt that has become fixed through long years of brewing. The principal ingredients are eggs, sugar, rum, spices and milk. The dye, which is allowed to be in the matter of rum, some families prefer brandy, and some, perhaps a majority, use both drinks.

The "Tom and Jerry" seized by the government agents was proved under chemical examination to contain rum, sugar, spices, milk and coal-tar dye. It was coal-tar dye of a very fine quality, and it gave the rich golden color that the thirsty Southerner looks for in his Christmas drink.

But the government decided it wasn't as good as eggs and the fine was imposed.

In making the announcement of this judgment the Department of Agriculture also made public another case in which a lot of eggs, which had been shipped several barrels of a drink called "Temperance Beer," which proved upon examination to be beer, pure and simple. A judgment of condemnation and forfeiture was entered, and the product ordered destroyed.

MAKE YOUR TRIPS TO AND FROM WORK PAY $300

Play a Game on the Way to the Office. It Means a Fortune for You. Ever stop to think that your trips to and from work are simple waste of time?

You sit in your seat allowing your brain to go to sleep, just sizing up the people getting on and off the car, or playing peek-a-boo over the top of your head with some pretty girl.

Notice the number of people reading foolish library books, riding back and forth, and consuming a book a week, yet it does them no good. They are told the theme of the story if they asked them. The books simply fill in the time that is all.

Why not make these rides back and forth now waste, pay you a tremendous amount of real, exhilarating amusement?

You can get the fifteen pictures already published by getting a contest catalogue. The catalogue is simply a list of 5,000 book titles, arranged in alphabetical order. From this catalogue the seventy-seven titles represented by the pictures were selected. Then the pictures were taken, and the contest is now on.

So seventy-seven of the selected titles are the very titles that will bring you the money!

Remember that all the titles are arranged in alphabetical order, so it is easy to look up possible titles.

Suppose a picture shows a woman hanging out clothes on a line. Well, it is plain to you, if you use your common sense, that the picture is of a woman hanging out clothes. The picture is of a woman hanging out clothes. The picture is of a woman hanging out clothes.

So you open your catalogue and look under the title beginning with the letter "W." "Wash Day," is listed there. And you look among the titles beginning with the letter "W." "Wash Day," is listed there. And you look among the titles beginning with the letter "W." "Wash Day," is listed there.

With each catalogue "The Times-Dispatch" gives you, free, seven certificates redeemable for the first thirty-five pictures. later was Mary, her mother's namesake, and the bitter tears she wept gave the impression that she alone of the children realized how suddenly and cruelly her mother's life had been snuffed out.

The absence of the father, a fugitive, who is suspected of firing the bullets into his wife's head while the bullets raged at Stowe last Wednesday night, meant much to Mary, but it had no significance for her little brothers and sisters.

CONNECTED WITH TWO IMPERIAL HOUSES

Despite Relatives, Countess Is Locked Up on Serious Charge.

BY LA MARQUESE DE PONTENAY.

COUNTRESS ERNEST VON TREUBERG, who has just been lodged in the Moabit Prison, in Berlin, on the charge of conspiracy, fraud, and fraud, is connected, through her husband, with two of the most important houses in Germany. The first Count Treuberg was Francis Fischer, tutor to Prince Charles Hohenzollern, grandfather of King Charles of Romania. His pupil had an elderly and very homely maiden aunt, Princess Cresscentia Hohenzollern, who became so infatuated with the young tutor that her family had no alternative but to consent to a morganatic marriage, previous to which he was created Baron Treuberg. A few years later the then King of Saxony advanced him to the rank of Count Treuberg.

The son born to this union between Princess Cresscentia of Hohenzollern and the tutor, married a daughter of Emperor Pedro I. of Brazil by the Marquis de Santos. Receiving the name of Isabella de Alcantara Brasileira, she was created Duchess of Goyaz, the peerage of Brazil, while still a child, by her father, and was a half-sister of Dom Pedro II, last Emperor of Brazil. Count Ernest Treuberg, husband of the woman who has been lodged in jail at Berlin, is the grandson of this Brazilian Duchess of Goyaz, and a great-grandson, therefore, of Emperor Pedro I. of Brazil, and of Princess Cresscentia of Hohenzollern.

Count Ernest Treuberg is a lieutenant of the imperial German navy, on the retired list, and when he realized, too late in the day, the ignominy of having married in a fit of temporary aberration one of the most notorious women of the Kaiser's capital, he emigrated to South America, from whence he has been endeavoring through his lawyers and relatives to secure either a divorce or an annulment of his marriage.

The woman is about forty-three years of age, still very handsome, was born at Anna Uhl in that Russian town of Offenbach the name of which always suggests comic opera, married at the age of twenty a Frankfurt merchant, who divorced her a couple of years later, and thereupon she came to Berlin, where she soon blossomed forth as one of the most conspicuous members of the half-world.

Within the last decade she has been engaged in the matrimonial agency business, and in usury, that is to say, she made use of the information which she obtained as a demi-mondaine, to inform usurers of the financial wants and status of her admirers and their friends, receiving handsome commissions on all the business which she thus brought, and being associated in the week of many a handsome fortune to Berlin, where she soon blossomed forth as one of the most conspicuous members of the half-world.

Lord Beaconsfield, who was very fond of him, was wont to relate that the first time when Sir Richard called at his house, Lady Beaconsfield, who had heard nothing of his strange aspect, happened to be in the drawing-room, and she was ushered in. On catching sight of her visitor, she took him to be some terrible gnomish supernatural apparition, or else that she was suffering from night-mare, and with a loud shriek, fainted dead away on the hearthrug. Lord Beaconsfield, attracted by the cry, hurried to the scene, but took the precaution of requesting Sir Richard to wait for him in the library, before making any attempt to bring back his wife to consciousness.

Sir Richard used to visit with the late Duke of Devonshire in his capacity for sleep during parliamentary debates in which he was not interested, and is on record as having slept through the entire discussion of Gladstone's home rule bill in 1886, his hat, which most members of the House wear during the sessions, says when addressing the Speaker, being a perfect marvel of adaptability to the laws of motion and balance throughout his slumbers. It never fell off, although in the mutations of his position, he was working out the course of a few minutes, a complete circle, swerving from the right ear, up over the left shoulder, and then backward, with the so familiar jerk Sir Richard owed his baronetcy to the splendid work which he did during the two great famines in India that occurred while he was Governor of Bombay, from 1874 to 1880. His career in India was indeed a very eventful one, and it was he who was intrusted with the drawing up of the evidence for the trial of the last Emperor of Delhi—the last of the great Moguls—for his share in the terrible massacres of the great mutiny in 1857. His influence with the natives of India of every class was unbounded, and it is asserted to have been largely due to his appearance, since they were convinced that there was something uncanny and supernatural about him.

suicides, all well-known men in Berlin society.

Two years ago she was almost involved in a criminal prosecution in connection with Count Bernhard von Treuberg, who was arrested for having pawned a diamond ring, worth several rings, which he had bought on credit, and under false pretenses, from a leading Berlin jeweler. The pawning was done by Countess Ernest Treuberg twenty-four hours after the pawned ring, the Countess by Count Schmettow, and the woman would undoubtedly have been sent to join him in jail, and would probably have been convicted of conspiracy to defraud, had not the countess's relatives, for the sake of his name, come to his rescue, extricated the jewels from pawn, returned them to the jeweler, and induced him to withdraw from the prosecution.

Sir Richard Temple, whose "Reminiscences" have just been published in London by his son and namesake, the second baronet of his line, was renowned in his day as the ugliest man who had ever sat in the English House of Commons. Although he had a most distinguished career in India, culminating in the governorship of Bombay, he was so grotesque in his appearance, with his colossal nose, huge mustache and bushy imperial, short figure, with long trunk and short bony legs, that he suggested the hero of the "Punch and Judy" shows.

His strange mannerisms were in keeping with his appearance, and he had the queerest way of jerking his head backward, or to one side, and of tilting his hat, that one could imagine. With all that, he was so courtly, and had the greatest penchant, even to the very last, for the society of pretty women, his conversation being always of the most entertaining and witty character.

His other hobby was neckties. Of these he had the most extensive collection. They were one more thing than the other, and they ranged from narrow strips of ribbon of the most glaring green patterns, to voluminous scarves of the palest blue or of the most aggressive crimson.

No member of the House received a greater number of late visitors, and hardly a day passed when Parliament was in session without his entertaining parties of the loveliest women in London society at tea, on the Terrace, or in his study, where he would sit forth as one of the most conspicuous members of the half-world.

Lord Beaconsfield, who was very fond of him, was wont to relate that the first time when Sir Richard called at his house, Lady Beaconsfield, who had heard nothing of his strange aspect, happened to be in the drawing-room, and she was ushered in. On catching sight of her visitor, she took him to be some terrible gnomish supernatural apparition, or else that she was suffering from night-mare, and with a loud shriek, fainted dead away on the hearthrug. "NITRATE KING" DISPLAYS "ROLL"

Despite Reputed Wealth, He Gives Ten-Cent Tip to Steward.

New York, August 10.—Just as S. E. Ossie, the "nitrate king" of Chili, who says he is richer than John D. Rockefeller, was ascending the companionway of the United Fruit steamer, the Pastora, which sailed yesterday for South America, a wallet fell from his pocket to the deck.

Passengers and crew stood watching the humble steward return the millionaire's wallet. Ossie took it and opened it. Every one craned his neck to get just one glimpse of the untold wealth inside. Ossie opened it, as was mentioned before, and they saw one lone dollar bill.

Then Ossie fumbled in his pocket. The steward looked relieved. The passengers crowded forward, expecting to watch the oncoming philanthropy. Ossie withdrew his hand and gave the steward a 10-cent piece.

"Lucky dog," said the others. "Just watch and see the big fat tip he gets for returning that bank roll!"
